In regard to the after-treatment, generally speaking, the bandage is retained for twenty-four hours; afterward, the bichloride solution (1 to 500) is rubbed on to the conjunctival surface every day for six to ten days. This treatment should be supplemented by bathing the eyes with a solution of boric acid two or three times daily. Applications of the nitrate of silver are usually required if the redness of the conjunctiva continues for more than ten days or two weeks. In cases where there is subsequent keatitis, insufflations of calomel powder are of advantage. As a matter of fact, each case must receive after-treatment on its own merits. It is better to have the patient in the hospital for two to four days after the operation; however, they do very well when treated as out patients. Some of the Conditions met with after the Operation.--It is not uncommon to see almost no reaction when the bandage is removed. The patient has no photophobia, and opens the eyes easily. On applying the bichloride solution, no pain is experienced. The conjunctiva. surface is smooth and normal in appearance. On close inspection, it is found that a plastic exudation has taken place, and that a firm layer of fibrin has tilled, the interstices, presenting a perfectly smooth surface to the cornea. This fibrinous membrane is more or less perfectly formed in almost every case, and persists in some cases...
