With the recent global economic meltdown, the job market has become more competitive than ever before. It has become apparent these days that only the focused and purpose-driven individuals, who not only have discovered themselves but also possess a positive attitude and understand how to develop and maximise their skills, would have a chance of a successful and unthreatened career. Indeed, what defines successful people is always their mentality. The Mind of Success gives a practical and acquirable approach that is directed at achieving self-actualisation. To understand the mind of success means being driven by the desire to achieve the utmost possible in your life as a product of hard but smart work based on the discovery and release of your complete potential and strengths. Having a mind of success is not the same as and should never be mistaken for being a success-conscious person. While the success-conscious person may mostly only think of what he or she can get within the shortest possible time, often hoping to do so without actually working hard for it, the mind of success understands the importance of the process the gradual but consistently progressing route to career building. Having the mind of success will always mean being where your skills are genuinely needed and rewarded, and more so while enjoying the use of those skills. A person with the mind of success will become increasingly enabled to meet even greater needs because of their uncommon commitment to their work (self-employed or not), and consequently earn even greater rewards. People in this category are the ones whose stories are told over and over again, and other people derive inspiration from just hearing or...
