It was the first Sundayschool in America established solely for religious teaching. People in other towns heard what Joanna Prince and Hannah Hill were doing, and formed schools. It was a new idea. Some of the ministers and deacons, and the old gray-haired men, shook their heads. They were commanded to keep the Sabbath-day holy: would it not be breaking the command to teach a school? Even though the children recited verses from the Bible, would they not be throwing stones at the squirrels and birds and playing tag in going or coming? A church in New Hampshire, to make sure that there would be no unseemly conduct, passed this vote: None except those of good moral character shall be admitted to the school. Many rrood men were greatly disturbed when the schools were established, fearing that it would lead to no end of evil. The mustard-seed of 1810 has become a wide-spreading tree, overshadowing all the land--the Bible the one text-book, its precepts the rule of life. The year before Joanna Prince and Hannah Hill started the first Sunday-school nine of the Congregational ministers of New Hampshire met at the house of the Rev. Samuel Wood, of Boscawen--in the room where Daniel Webster, when fitting for college, recited his lessons. They saw many people who had no Bibles--who were too poor to buy one or had not...
