The elephant-bearing lava, nevertheless, was of a different character. Exactly the same lava as that containing human remains was subsequently observed, however, at another point. This did not enclose the bones of the Pliocene elephant, but it did enclose those of the mammoth or Champlain elephant, which lived after the reign of ice. These were associated, also, with the remains of other Champlain animals. Thus it was demonstrated that the man of Denise, as he has been called, was not preglacial. What remains unaccountable is the persistence of French and German anthropologists in parading the man of Denise as a specimen from the depths of the Tertiary age. Again, the river-drifts of the Somme have been set down as glacial or preglacial; and hence the human flints which they contain were made by men who lived at a period vastly more remote than the accepted epoch of human creation. These are the relics, the reports of which sounded through the world thirty years ago, and first startled us with the claim that all the popular Adamic chronology was fallacious. A commission of English geologists went over to investigate the gravels, and concluded that they are post-glacial. Nevertheless, certain French geologists continued to proclaim tertiary man, and some of them seem unable to unlearn that phrase. The opinion is hazardous. Abundant localities are now known, in the valley of the Somme, in which radical as to dismiss his caution: Das wahrscheinlichste ist dass dieser...
