Excerpt: .place appeared to be an unprovoked attack. I never presumed at that moment to describe its conclusive terms, because I knew very well that the information we had received was partial; and in point of fact within, I believe, 24 hours, certainly in a very short time, important qualifications of that statement were received from Sir P. Lumsden. Now this last phrase is if not quite incorrect, wholly misleading. The elaborate analysis and exposure of General Komaroffs defence, which Sir Peter Lumsden made on April 18th, and which appears on pages 21 and 22, confirms and strengthens his previous evidence as to the aggression, and the unprovoked aggression, of General Komaroff. The only modification since is the knowledge that Komaroff had received from his Government information as to the agreement of March 16th. But this at best only throws the responsibility for unprovoked aggression on to the Russian Government. Moreover, Lord Dufferin, in public speech, has since described it as an unprovoked attack, and emphasised Mr. Gladstone s declaration. The latest account of the proposed arbitration, in the Russian Official Messenger of May 8th, shows that the view taken in this pamphlet is accurate. The Russian Government were cognisant of the orders sent to General Komaroff to attack, and they defend him accordingly, and accept the responsibility. These are the words of the Russian official statement: -- In taking action against the Afghans with a view to forcing them to abandon the right bank...
